AND CHURCH LANE.

PREFACE.

THIS Abridgment has been made by Mr. John Robson, B.A., under the superintendence of Dr. Smith. The leading features of the Work are :—

1. Full explanations of the forms, meanings, and syntactical constructions of all words employed by the classical authors usually read in schools, and whose names are given in the first list appended to this Preface.

2. The sufficient illustration of these points by quotations from the Classics.

3. The insertion in every case of the name of at least one author by whom the word is employed.

4. An exhibition of the etymological affinities of words, chiefly within the limits of the Latin language itself, but frequently extending beyond it to the cognate languages, especially Greek.

5. The insertion at the end of the articles of such Italian, French, and occasionally Spanish derivatives, as have undergone changes which conceal to some extent their parentage.

It is obvious, therefore, that the plan of this Work differs widely from that of any School Latin Dictionary hitherto published in this country ; and it is believed to be more in accordance with the actual state of philology, and to be better adapted to meet the requirements of enlightened teachers than those adopted in previous works of a similar kind. How far the execution of this plan may deserve the approbation of scholars, it is for them, of course, to decide ; but it may be truly stated that no care or labour has been spared to render the work practically useful, by clearness of arrangement and of typography, by minute accuracy, by completeness, and by intelligibility. On each of these points the following explanatory statements may be made.

One of the principal difficulties experienced by school-boys in using a Dictionary is the selection of the particular signification required in each passage, from the frequently numerous meanings assigned to a word. This difficulty to some extent, no doubt, arises from the very nature of the case, and is so far unavoidable; but it is greatly increased by the utter want of arrangement observable in most School Dictionaries, in which all the significations of a word are usually printed together, undistinguished in any way from one another, and placed without regard to any principle either etymological or logical, while nothing, or next to nothing, in the shape of illustrative quotations, is inserted. The pupil naturally therefore assumes that it is a matter of indifference which signification he chooses from the mass so presented to him; and hence, as involving the least trouble, the first is the one usually taken, whether it be right or wrong. Whatever can be done in a Dictionary to counteract this evil has, it will be seen, been attempted in this Work; the various meanings, uses, and constructions of words being carefully and clearly separated, so as to be evident at a mere glance; and thus even the most thoughtless will be prevented from assuming that any meaning may be taken indifferently. It is undeniable, however, that the proper use of a Dictionary is by no means an easy thing; and it is to be regretted that teachers generally take little or no pains to assist their pupils in this respect: a few hours devoted to the explanation and illustration of the proper method of using a Dictionary would be of the greatest possible service to boys, and at the same time yield an abundant reward to the teacher.

With respect to typographical accuracy, it may be stated that the Abridgment was made from the corrected pages of the larger work, on the revision of which unusual pains were bestowed, and it has itself been very carefully read while going through the press; so that it is anticipated that very few typographical errors will be discovered. Great care has also been taken in reference to the quantities, which are accurately marked throughout.

The completeness of this Dictionary consists in its containing all the words found in the writings of the authors whom it professes to explain. In ordinary School Dictionaries no principle appears to have been followed as to the class of words which are admitted or rejected; and thus it frequently happens, even in the best modern works of this kind, as for instance in that of Ingerslev,* that words used by such authors as Gellius and Seneca are inserted, while others employed by Cicero and Virgil are omitted. It is confidently believed that this Dictionary contains every word which a young scholar is likely to meet with in the course of his reading; but it seemed worse than useless to encumber the Work with words, an explanation of which will never be wanted by the persons for whom the book is designed. By omitting such words, not only is the mechanical use of the Work (an important point in a Dictionary) greatly facilitated, but space has been gained for a full explanation of the words inserted, and for the illustration of their meanings and constructions by quotations from the ancient writers. But while this Dictionary is mainly intended to explain the writings of the authors comprised in the first list only, yet it contains many words and meanings of words which do not occur in such authors, but a knowledge of which is necessary for the full understanding of other words and meanings of words which are met with in their works. Hence the names of many authors never read by young students will be found in this book; these are collected in the second list of proper names appended to this Preface.

In preparing this Work, it has constantly been borne in mind that it is intended principally for the use of young scholars; and hence great attention has been paid to the intelligibility and simplicity of all the definitions and explanations. The grammatical portion is taken entire from the larger Dictionary, and the nomenclature adopted throughout is that which is most in accordance with modern philology, and which is both more philosophical and more intelligible than that which still keeps its place in many Grammars.

* The Latin-German School Dictionary of Dr. Ingerslev, which was published at Brunswick in 1853, is perhaps the best work of the kind that has yet appeared in Germany; and every thing of real value which it contains will be found incorporated in the present Work.

The Appendix of Proper Names has been added rather in compliance with custom than because it was considered of much real utility; since the necessary brevity of the notices it contains quite precludes the giving of anything like full or satisfactory information; and in many cases these incomplete statements are liable to suggest erroneous inferences. Still great pains have been taken to state nothing positively incorrect; but the Classical Dictionaries must be consulted by those who require more detailed information. It may be stated that the references in the body of the Work to 'Smith's Antiquities' are to the second edition of the Smaller Dictionary of Antiquities.

In conclusion, the attention of teachers is directed to the facilities which this Dictionary affords for that method of studying the Latin language, which is at once the most philosophical, most interesting, and most expeditious, namely, the etymological or analytical. By placing hyphens between the prefixes and the roots, and by giving the roots separately whenever the process of combination has given rise to any euphonic change, the pupil is here furnished with means which will enable him, if properly assisted, to trace without difficulty the connection of compound and derived words with their roots: he will thus obtain an insight into the constructive principles of the language, the comprehension of which will not only incalculably diminish the labour and lighten the drudgery of mastering its vocabulary, but will also lay the foundation of a knowledge of comparative philology, and, through it, of other branches of science of the highest value.

A, indecl. f. (sc. litera), oftener a, the first letter of the Latin alphabet. At the end of words it is usually short, except in the numerals, triginta & nonaginta, and in Abl. of nouns and Imper. of verbs. In compds. a long by nature generally remains unchanged: lābor, dēdōr; a short in roots is changed into i, and that even where in secondary forms it becomes long by position: fācio, effācio; frāgo (from frāg), perfrāgo; a in roots long by position is changed into e: scādo, dēscēdo. Sometimes it remains unchanged: pātena, impatiēns. As an abbreviation A = Aulus, while Appius is written App. On the voting tablets in the Comitia, A. (i. e. Antiquo) denoted the rejection of the proposed law; but in judicial trials A = Abolito; whence A is called litera salutaris. In dates A. D. = ante diem (v. ante). A. U. C. = anno ab urbe condita.

Ab, ā, or aba, prep. with abl. A is used instead of ab before many of the nouns beginning with consonants; but before A as well as before vowels ab is always used. Ab occurs chiefly in compds.; but in old writers aba te, aba quo are met with. In composition, ab remains unchanged before ba. Before m and v, it becomes a, a-movo, a-vertō. In the perfect tenses of sum, both ab and a are found; ab-fui, a-fui. Before fero and fugio, ab becomes au, au-fero, au-fugio. Before p, c, g, t, aba, or the shortened form a, is used, as ab-comdo, ab-tino, as-porta.

Ab denotes, 1. The point of departure, the source and origin: 2. Separation or distance: 3. Proximity.

A, SPACE. 1. Implying motion from a place or point without reference to the space traversed: me portu prae-misi, he sent me on before from the harbour, Plant. Hence with verbs of separation or removal, as abduco, mittere, discedere, etc. Paululum a sole, a little out of the sun, Cic. 2. With reference to the space passed over: strengthened with usque (even to, all the way through, v. usque): ab imis unguibus usque ad verticem summum, from his toe nails even to his very crown, Cic. 3. Without the idea of motion, to designate distance, or separation, with the verbs distare, abesse, and with the particles procul, longe, etc.: non amplius pedum millibus duobus ab castris, Caes. Also to denote the measure of the distance: a millibus passuum quindecim, at a distance of 15 miles, Caes.

IV, Implying proximity: expressed by at, on, in, etc., ab decumana porta, at the main entrance, Caes. So, a tergo, a latere, a fronte, ab occasu, ab oriente; esp. in geog. descriptions: Gallia ab Sequanis et Helvetiis adtingit Rhenum, at the parts occupied by, Caes.

B, TIME, analogous to the relations of space. 1. Without reference to the period subsequently elapsed: After: ab re divina, after the sacrifice, Pl.

II, With reference to a subsequent period: From . . . to: a mane ad noctem usque, from morning to night, Pl. ab sole orto in multum diel, from sun-rise till late in the day, Liv. 3. To designate the distance of one point of time from another: From, since, after: centesima lux ab interitu Clodii, since the death of Clodius, Cic.: ab urbe condita, since the foundation of Rome.

IV, Denoting proximity, At: ab initio, a primo, a principio, etc. at the beginning, at first.

C, IN OTHER RELATIONS, ab denotes, as in Space and Time (but figuratively), departure from, separation, or distance and proximity: 1. Employed before words representing either the agents, or the causes of effects denoted by verbs. From, by, by means of: a patre laudari; ab aliquo discere, cognoscere, occidere, etc. 2. With names of towns instead of gentile adj. to denote origin: a Cora atque Pometia liberus, Liv. 3. In etymologies: eam rem illi putant a sum cuiusque tribuendo appellatum, ego a legendo, Cic. 4. To denote the motive, instead of ex, propter, or the simple abl. causae: From, out of: Linguae ab irrisu exacerentem, out of derision, Liv. 5. Dolere, laborare, valere ab, instead of the simple abl.: doleo ab animo, doleo ab oculis, doleo ab aegritudine, Pl. 6. With verbs of expecting, fearing, hoping, etc., ab = a part: hence timere, metuere ab aliquo, does not mean to fear any one, but, to fear something from him: metui a Chryside, I feared some mischief from her, Ter. 7. Implying the separation of a part from the whole, out of, for: ex acuto ab novissimis uni militi detracto, Caes. 8. The origin, adverbially, a se = sua sponte, of one's own accord, spontaneously, Cic. 9. Denoting departure from, or avoidance of. Hence, 1. where beginning and repeating are implied: a summo bibere, to drink in succession down the table: a cauda de ovo exire, tail foremost, Plin.: a minimo ad maximum, from the smallest to the greatest, Pl. 2.

With verbs of freeing from or protecting against anything: expiandum propter ab illis sceleris vestigiis, Cic.: hence, perhaps, ulcisci se ab aliquo, to take vengeance on one, Plin. 3. With verbs of deterring, intermitting, desisting, ceasing: deterere, intermittere, desistere, etc.: ab injuria deterere, Cic. 4. Denoting separation (without the idea of proceeding or departure), analogous (fig.) to A. 3. and B. 3. distance in order, rank, mind, or feeling; with secundus, tertius, etc.: with alter, alius, alienus, diversus, etc.: quartus ab Arceis, the fourth from Arceis, Cic.: secundus a rege, next in rank to the king, B. Alex. Also in the phrase, non ab re, sc. alienum, not without profit or advantage: which, however, is not used by Cicero. 5. Denoting proximity: 1. Hence it occurs in phrases such as, to stand by, or on the part of: Stare, facere, sentire, esse ab aliquo, to be on one's side, to belong to his party: a nobis facere, in our favour, Cic.: vir ab innocentia clementissimus, on the side of innocence, id. Hence to distinguish philosophical sects: nostris illi a Platone et Aristotele, the adherents of the Plat. and Aristot. philosophy, Cic. 2. Ab defines more exactly than the simple abl. the respect in which anything is to be understood, in relation to, on the part of: orba ab optimatus contio, Cic. 3. With verbs of fastening and holding: funiculus a puppi religatus, id. 4. Subsequently to the Aug. age words dependent on ab were employed to denote office and dignity with or without servus: a manu servus, a secretary, Suet.

D, In composition with verbs ab denotes removal, disappearance, absence: aufero, carry away: abutor, use up: absum, be absent. ad, prep. with acc. for euphony some times written at. Anciently, ar, e. g. archo, arbit, arcesso (q. v.) So: ar me advenias, Pl.: and in Inscript. ar fuerunt, arfuisse. As antith. to ab (as in to ex), ad denotes, first, direction towards an object either without or with motion; then the reaching of or attaining to it; and, finally, the being at or near it.

A. In space: 1. Direction towards without motion: to, towards: often of geog. position, with the verbs jacere, vergere, spectare, etc.: Gallia vergit ad septentriones, Caes. 2. Direction towards with motion, and either with or without the idea of arrival, towards, to, against: ad quemvis numerum equitum quamvis pauci adire audent, Id. 2. With the idea of arrival: to, even to, with or without usque: usque ad castra hostium accessit, Caes.: quum sudor ad imos manaret talos, Hor. Fig. deverbasse usque ad necem, Ter. Without usque: virgils ad necem caedi, Cic. Hence the whole space traversed is indicated by the words dependent on ab and ad: the former marking the point of departure, the second that of arrival. Ad me, te, etc. = domum meam, tuam, etc.: te oro, ut ad me Vibonem statim venias, Cic. Sometimes domum is expressed: neque domum unquam ad me litteras mittam, Id. A proper name is similarly employed: magni domum concursus ad Afranium sebant, to the house of Afranius, Caes. Ad, with the name of a deity in the Gen., is elliptical for ad templum or sedem: ad Opia, Cic.: ad Vestae, Hor. With names of towns, ad is used with verbs of motion, instead of the simple Acc. profectus sum ad Capuam, quinque anno post ad Tarentum, Cic. Ad is always used when the name is joined with another subst.: ad Clitum oppidum iter constituit, Sall. Both constr. are used by the poets: ad doctas prudens cogor Athenas, Prop.: doctas Jam nunc eat, inquit, Athenas, Ov.

III. Proximity = apud: near to, by, at, among: sol quasi flagitator astat usque ad oculum, stands like a dun continually at the door, Pl.: ad forum esse, to be at the market, Id. Hence, ad laevam or sinistram (sc. manum, partem), adverb. on the left hand, on the left, Ter.: and with an ordinal number: cum plebes ad tertium miliarium condisset, at the third milestone, Cic. Ad urbem esse, was said of generals who remained outside the gates of Rome until permission was given for a triumph; and also of those appointed to military or provincial commands, but previously to their setting out to enter upon their duties, Cic. Even of persons: among, before = apud: ad iudices aci agi solet, Id. Frequently with proper names of places: ad Velas terror multiplex erat, Liv.: especially with the word pugna: pugna ad Trebiam, ad Trasimenum, ad Cannas, etc.

B. In time, analogous to the relations to, and III., in A. 1. Direction towards, i. e. approach to a definite point of time: about, towards: domum reductus ad vesperum, about evening, Cic. 2. The limit to which a space of time extends, with or without usque: usque, even to, up to: usque ad hanc aetatem, Pl.: Sophocles ad summam senectutem tragodias fecit, Cic. Hence the whole period is defined by the words dependent on ab, or ab usque, and ad: the former marking its beginning, the latter its end: ab hora fere quarta usque ad solis occasum, Caes. 3. A point of time either past or future: at, on, in, by: ad horam destinatum, at the appointed hour, Cic.

C. The relations of number. 1. An approximation to a certain sum: near, almost, about (Fr. près de, à peu près, presque, etc.): ad quadraginta eam posse emi minas, Pl.: also sometimes with quasi: quasi ad quadraginta minas, Id.: sane frequentes fulminis omnino ad ducentos, Cic. In the histt. and post-Aug. authors ad is added adverbially in this sense: occisus ad hominum milibus quatuor, Caes. 2. The terminus, the limit: to, even to (rare): sedem Junonis ad partem didimam detegit, even to the half, Liv.: ad assem, to the last farthing, Hor. The phrase ad unum omnes, or simply ad unum, means all together, all without exception: omnes ad unum idem sentiant, Cic. 3. An addition: ad Faleriorum Pyrrhiae proditoriorem, tertium transagis documentum esset, a third example to desert, in addition to the traitors of Faleris and of Pyrrhus, Liv.

D. In all the manifold relations of one object to another. 1. With verbs which imply a reference to any one, or which denote something done for him: as those of giving, sending, informing, submitting, etc., ad with acc. is frequently used in a sense different from that of the Dat. In connection with the same verbs: litteras dare ad aliquem = to send or write one a letter; but litteras dare alicui = give one a letter to one, i. e. into his own hand: ad me ex Aegypti litteras misit, Cic. Hence mittere or scribere librum ad aliquem = to dedicate a book to one: quae institueram, ad te mittam, Id. So in titles of books: M. Tullii Cicero ad Marcum Brutum Orator, etc. In the titles of odes and epigrams ad aliquem signifies to, addressed to, and in aliquem, against one. But there is often no distinction between a Dat. and ad with an Acc.: ad Q. Fulvium Hirpinum derunt esse, Liv. 2. With regard to, in respect of, as to. 1. With verbs: ad omnia alta aetate sapimus rectus, in respect to all other things we grow wiser by age, Ter. 2. With adjectives: where ad = for, of, to: ad rationem solertiamque praestantior, Cic.: locum ad egrediendum idoneum, Caes. 3.

With substantives: mentis ad omnia caecitas, Cic. So with the Gerund instead of the Gen. of the same: facultas ad scribendum, id. Applied to persons, ad sometimes = adversus, against: ad senem aliquam fabricam fingit, Ter.

III. The standard or rule to which anything is referred: agreeably to, according to, after: ad istorum normam sapientes, Cic. Ad speciem has several meanings: 1. in the manner of: ad urbium spectem, Suet. 2. For show, display: ad speciem vetustatis, Cic.

3. For appearance sake: pauca ad speciem tabernaculis relictis, Caes. Also where the model or rule is likewise the cause, according to, in consequence of: ad horum preces, in consequentiam, Liv.

IV. To denote, 1. an aim or purpose: haec juventutem ad facinora incendebat, Sall. this use of ad is very common with the gerund: alere canes ad venandum, Ter. Hence, instead of an adj. to designate a profession: miles ad naves, a marine, Liv.: servi ad lectum = remiges = coarctati, id.: ad lectum boules, litteratores, chairmen, Catull. 2. (i. e. ante diem quartum Idus Martias), on the 12th of March, Liv. at or atque, conj. (the latter ancient form is retained by the poets, and by Cicero in his letters. For the sake of euphony sometimes written ad). At denotes transition of thought, and in most cases adds something, the effect of which is to diminish or destroy the force of what has been admitted: sed is a word of opposition, and at one of addition: at is always at the beginning of a sentence or clause. 1. Mere transition (freq. with a limiting meaning): but, yet: cominus gladius pugnatum est: at Germani, celeriter phalanga facta, impetus gladiorum exceperunt, Caes. Hence at frequently occurs at the beginning of the subdivisions of works, as the books of the Aeneid, Ovid's Metamorphoses, etc., in which cases it serves to indicate a close connection, yet by way of contrast, between the end of the preceding division and the beginning of the new one, e. g.: talibus exemplis monitae nova sacra frequentant, turque dant, sanctasque colunt Iasmenides aras (the last two lines of Ov. M. 5): at non Alcibios Minyelas orgia censeat accipienda (the commencement of the next book). 2. Esp. in emphatic or impassioned style: consurgit Turnus in ensem et ferit. With comparatives for quam, than: haud minus ac iusti faciunt, Virg. 7. With adverbs of time, esse simul (v. examples under simul). Also with principio, statim: principia atque animus ephiebas aetate exiit, Pl. B. To connect whole clauses: and, and so, and even, and too: hence sometimes with ac or similiter: Africanus indigens me? Minime hercle. Ac ne ego quidem illius, Cic. 2. aut, conj. from alterum (one of two, not both) or: introduces an alternative regarded objectively as a fact: vel, from volo, also implies an alternative, but viewed as still to be chosen, and therefore dependent on the will; that is considered subjectively. Hence in many cases either aut or vel may be used, according to the point of view from which the subject is regarded: e.g. satis esse causae arbitrabatur quare in Dumnorigem aut ipse animadverteret, aut civitatem animadvertere juberet, Caes. Here Caesar contemplates the alternatives as hypothetical facts: petit ut vel ipse de eo statuatur, vel civitatem statueret fubeat, ib. In this passage the same alternatives are stated, but from a different point of view, viz., as left to the choice of Divitiacus. Aut (or aut . . . aut, for there is no essential distinction between the two cases, since aut may always be understood at the beginning of the former clause) introduces an alternative the acceptance or admission of which implies the rejection or denial of the connected alternative; but whether the co-existence of the alternatives is possible or not is indicated by the context: truncis arborum aut admodum firmis ramis abscisis, trunks of trees, or (if they were not to be had) very stout branches, Caes. II. In logical arguments, however, aut introduces an alternative inconsistent with another alternative, so that both propositions cannot be true: its most frequent employment in this way is in those arguments called dilemmas: omnia bene sunt ei dicenda, qui hoc se pos-e proficitur, aut eloquentiae nomen relinquendum est, Cic. 2. In two distinctive phrases: res ipsa et republicae tempus aut me ipsum, quod nullo, aut alium quemquam aut invitabit aut desubtrahit, id. 3. In negative clauses for neque . . . neque: ne aut ille alserit, aut usquam ceciderit aut perfergerit aliquid, Ter. 4. In interrogations: quaevisit nullo ille aut ille defensurus esset, Cic. III. In a limiting sense, to subjoin something less important: or at least: submersas obire puppes, aut age diversas, Virg.: quæro, num iniquate aut improbe fecerit, or at least unfairly, Cic. IV. Only in the poets, neque . . . aut sometimes takes the place of neque . . . neque:

neque ego hanc abscondere furto speravi, ne finge, fugam: nec conjugis unquam praetendi taedas, aut haec in fodera veni, Virg. V. The poets connect by aut . . . vel, vel . . . aut, instead of aut . . . aut, or vel . . . vel (in prose writers the two particles are never connected): tellus aut hisce, vel istam, quae facit ut laeclur, mutando perde figuram, Ov. VI. In connection with other particles: 1. Aut etiam: quid ergo aut hunc prohibet, aut etiam Xenocratem, Cic. 2. Aut certe: ac video hanc primam Ingressionem meam aut reprehensionis aliquid, aut certe admirationis habituram, id. 3. Aut vero for connecting a more important thought: or indeed, or truly: quem tibi aut hominem, aut vero deum, auxilio futurum putas? id. 4. Aut ne . . . quidem: ego jam aut rem, aut ne spem quidem exspecto, id. 5. Aut quidem: Suet. VII. Aut . . . aut = partim . . . partim: partem plantilae aut Jovis templum aut oppidum tenet, Liv. (Hence Ital. o; Fr. ou.)

autem, conj. [v. aut] (never used at the beginning of a clause): again, moreover: unum (iter) angustum et difficile erat: mons autem altissimus impendebat, Caes. 2. It frequently marks a transition with a more or less emphatic contrast: again, on the other hand, but: lego autem libentissime, Cic. II. When a word is repeated from a previous clause, in continuing a train of thought: nunc quod agitur, agamus: agitur autem, libere vivamus, aut mortem obeamus, id. III. = sed, vero, igitur, etc., in resuming a train of thought interrupted by a parenthesis: princeps omnium virtutum illa sapientia, quam σοφία Graeci vocant = (prudens enim, quam Graeci φρόνησις, illam quandam intelligimus, quae est rerum expetendarum fugendarumque scientia), illa autem sapientia, quam principem dixi, etc., id. IV. In connecting a parenthetical clause itself: quae autem nos ut recta aut recte facta dicamus, si placet (illi autem appellant καρποθύματα) omnes numeros virtutis continent, id. V. In arguments, to indicate the steps by which the conclusion is reached: aut hoc, aut illud: hoc autem non, igitur illud. Itemque: aut hoc, aut illud: non putting hoc: illud igitur, id. VI. In putting an emphatic question: indeed, forsooth. Th. Ego non tangam meam? Ch. Tuam autem, furcifer? thine, forsooth, Ter. Esp. where a correction is made: num quis testis Postumum appellavit? testis autem? num accusator? witness did I say? Cic. VII. In the poets, autem are connected in interrogations: sed quid ego haec autem nequiquam ingrata revolve? Virg.

B, b. indecl. n. denotes the soft labial sound between v and p: as a labial it is connected with v, p, f, and m: while as a medial it is the correlative of g and d. It is used in words formed to express certain natural sounds, as in balare, barrire, boare, bombitare, &c. The Romans probably gave the sound p in many cases where they wrote b, especially when the b was final, as in ab, ob, sub, or when these preps. were used in comp., as before c, p, and f, when no assimilation took place in writing. Quintilian says "quum dico obtinui secundam b litteram ratio poscit, aure magis audiant p." so sometimes scribitus is found instead of scriptus. Hence we find variations between b and ps: b seems to have been retained when it belonged to the root of the word, as plebs, urbs; except in the verbal forms nupsi, scripsi, where p was preferred. Still there are var. cf. Alcyurus and Apyrtus, opsonium and obsonium: gen., however, the Gr. φ was rendered by ps.

1. B is interchanged with other labials. 1. With v: ferbus and ferri; sebum and serum: thus the Latin b is often changed into v in Ital., Fr., and Sp., as habere, avere, avoir, etc. So also the MSS. often vary between bixit and vixit, rene for bene, and so on. Allied to this is the interchange of b with dy, de or die, as bonus for duonus, bellum for duellum, bis for dis; Sans. divis.

2. With p: kappaoros, carbassus; μῦθος, buzus; μυρίος, burgus; Germ. burg: poplicus was afterwards publicus, and Ennius wrote hurrus for Pyrrhus.

3. With f: αἶψα, ambo; ὀφθαλμός (later ὀφθαλμός) orbis; so rubeo and rufus. 4. With m: βροτός, mortalis: still more freq. b is inserted between m and a liquid, as cumulare; Fr. comblor: numerus; Fr. nombre, etc. II. B is interchanged, though rarely, with gutturals: with g, ch, c: Sans. gō, Lat. dos; χολή, Eng. gall, Lat. bilis: Suevia was an older form of Saburia, and cuso is found for dufo.

III. In Inscr. B. gen. denotes bonus or bene: thus B. D. = Bona Dea; B. M. = Bene Merenti. Sometimes it stands for Beneficiarius, and B. B. for Beneficarius.

C.

C, the third letter of the Latin alphabet, corresponded originally in sound to the Greek Γ. The Duilian inscription gives LECIONES for legiones; and even to the latest times C and Γ stood for Gaius and Gnaeus. But from an early period there was a tendency to give to C the sound of K: in inscriptions Consul is represented by the abbreviation Cos. not Kos; and K was retained as a written symbol only before a, as in KAL for Calendæ and Calumnia. However, it seems undoubted that as long as Latin remained uncorrupted, C retained the hard sound of K, even before the vowels i and e. II, Interchanges of C with other letters: C and G: vicesimus, tricesimus, etc. rest on better authority than rigesimus, trigesimus, etc.: in It. and Sp. such words as amicus, secundus, are amigo, segundo. With s C and G form z: coque, dixi; rego, rezi. 2, c and h: h becomes in traho, tractus; veho, vectus and h like c form z: traho, trazi; veho, rezi. 3, c and t: we find Basculi and Basuli, Vectones and Vettones: cf. nux (root, nuc) and Eng. nut.

III, Changes of C in the Romance languages: 1. Of c into ch: cf. Lat. cibullus, calidus, camera, canis with Fr. cheral, chaud, chambre, chien, etc. 2. Of c into s: cf. Lat. facimus, licere, placere, etc.: with Fr. faisons, loisir, plaisir, etc. 3. Of c into a: cf. Lat. acer, macer, etc.: with Fr. aigre, maigre.

(iii) followed by r: cf. Lat. lacrima, with Fr. larme. IV, As an abbrev. c stands for Gaius or Caius, and reversed, G, for Gaia, Caia. Upon voting tablets it meant condemno. D.

D, d, the fourth letter of the Latin alphabet, corresponding, both in sound and in place, to the Greek Delta (Δ). It is the medial dental, being most closely connected with t, the thin dental; and less closely with the other medial mutes, b and g. I. Interchanges of D with other letters. 1. D and T. At the end of words t was frequently substituted for d in early times; hence some modern editors write at for ad, apud for apud, etc. T and d are interchanged also in the derivation of words: e. g. from mentior comes mendax, from quattuor quadraginta, etc.

2. Du and B. At the beginning of words, d followed by a vowel has been changed into b: e. g.: duellum, bellum; duis, bis; duonus, bonus. In some cases, the d has been dropped, and the vowel with which it was connected slightly modified: e. g.: duvigi became viginti; Dianus, Janus. 3. D and R: e. g.: auris, audio; ar, ad; apor, apud. 4. D and L: e. g.: pando, palam; scando, scala; dacrima, lacrima; ὄδωσaris, Ulixes; sedes, gella; mando, mala. 5. D and S: e. g.: pōbor, rosa; medius, medius; so the Sabine name Claudius became Claudius. 6. In compound words, d at the end of the first portion of the compound is generally assimilated to the initial consonant of the second portion with which it comes in contact: e. g.: ac-cedo; af-ficio; ag-gredior; al-ludo; ap-parare; ar-rigo; as-sidere. So quip-piam for quid-piam; quic-quam for quid-quam. When in such cases, d is followed by s and another consonant, it is omitted altogether: e. g. a-scendo, a-stringo. The same thing takes place when d is followed by the nasal gn: e. g.: a-gnatus, a-gnosco.

7. In inflection d is either omitted before s, or (rarely) assimilated: e. g.: custos for custod-s; lae-ni, for laed-ni; but cae-ni, for caed-ni. II. Changes of d in the Romance languages: 1. D into Z, especially d into z: e. g.: Lat. ardens, pendulus, Il. arzenite, penolo; Lat. mihus, radius, Il. mazzo, razzo.

2. D into G or J: e. g.: Lat. kodie, It. oggi; Lat. dies, diurnus, Fr. jour.

3. D into L: e. g.: Lat. caducus, ciadua, hadera, Il. caluco, ciadua, ellera.

4. D into R (rare): e. g.: Lat. lampia, Lampadi, Sp. lampara.

5. D into N: e. g.: Lat. lampada, lappadi, It. lampina; Lat. peridic, Il. pernice.

6. Omission of D: (i) In French, between two vowels: e. g.: Lat. audis, gladius, fides, nudus, videtur; Fr. ouir, glaiue, foi, nu, voir.

(ii) In Italian at the end of words: e. g.: Lat. ad, apud, modo, fides, Il. a, eypo, mā, fr.

III. In the oldest period of the language, the ablat. sing. ended in d: MARID, DICTATORE, in ALTOD MARID, on the Col. Rostr. 2. Several prepositions and other prefixes originally ended in d, which d was afterwards usually dropped: e. g. prod in prod-ire, prod-esse; red in red-ire, red-ere; sed in sed-ire.

IV. As an abbreviation, D usually stands for the praenomen Decimus; also for Dens, Divus, Dominus, Decurio, etc.; in epitaphs, D. M. = Dis Manibus.

N.B. The use of the symbol D as the representative of 500 is a modern corruption: the original mark was the half of the original Tuscan numeral 5 or CIO = 1000, which printers have found it convenient to represent by D.

dē, prep. with ablat. denotes the departure or removal of an object from a thing to which it was originally attached. Accordingly it occupies a middle place between ex and ab; ex denoting departure or removal from out of the interior of an object, ab, departure or removal from the surface of an object. Hence verbs compounded with dē are constructed with ex and ab as well as with dē; and verbs compounded with ex and ab are constructed with dē, as well as with ex and ab. Etymologically dē is connected with dū: and dis (dir) ad dē, used only in composition, are also of the same origin, the s being added as in abs, obs, subs, etc. [v. ab]: dēn from, from, away from, out of, etc.

A. Of space: 1. With motion, denoting departure: from, away from: (quod Arriovitus) de altera parte agri bequinos decedere juberet, to withdraw from, Caes.: de vita decedere, Cic.: exire de vita, id. 2. B. Of time: the point of departure: after (very rare): velim scire hodiene statim de auctione aut quo die venias, Cic. Hence diem de die, from day to day: quum is diem de die differret, Liv.

6. In the phrases de nocte, de vigilia, etc., to denote the period during or in the course of which the action is done: hence it is less definite than the simple abl. which designates the precise time: in comitum Milo de nocte venit, in the night, Cic.: ut jugulent homines, surgunt de nocte latrones, Hor. Caesar mittit complures equitum turmas eo de media nocte, about midnight, Caes.: Caesar de tertia vigilia e castris profectus, in the course of the third watch, id. In like manner, de die, de luce: de die potare, by day, in the daytime, Pl. Less freq., de mense: navigare de mense Decembris, in December, Cic.

C. In gen. 1. Hence, with abl. instead of the genitive case: ne ex parte partis esset de nostris bonis, Ter.: cetera de genere hoc, Lucr. Hence 2. esp. to denote property, de meo, tuo, etc.: obsonat, potat, olet unguenta de meo, Ter.: de suo, Cic. And fig.: ad tua praepcepta de meo nihil si novum apposivi, Pl. 3. To designate the material, etc. of which anything is made: of, out of: de eodem oleo et opera exaravi nescio quid ad te, Cic.: niveo factum de marmore signum, Ov. Hence it sometimes implies transformation: de templo carcerem fieri, Cic.

4. To indicate the person from whom anything is taken, bought, heard, inquired, etc.: de aliquo quaerere, id.: ut alibi liceret discere id de me, Ter.

D. Of mental operations, moral feelings, etc. 1. To indicate the subject of thought, etc. (the most common meaning): about, concerning, with respect to: de numero dierum fidem servare, Caes.: de Dionysio sum admiratus, Cic. 2. To denote the cause or reason: for, on account of, because of: de quo nomine ad arbitrum addisti, de eo ad iudicium venisti, id.: qua de causa magno dolore adflictebantur, Caes.: de labore pectus tundit, with pain, Pl. Hence, 3. To designate that in conformity with which any thing is done: according to, after: de suorum propinquo sententia atque auctoritate fecisse dicitur, Cic.: de more vetusto, Virg.

E. With adjectives to form adverbial expressions. 1. De integro, afresh: ratio de integro inunda est mihi, Ter. 2. De improvviso, unexpectedly, Caes.: Cic. 3. De transverso, unexpectedly: ecce autem de transverso L. Caesar ut veniam ad te rogat, id.

F. In composition, the e becomes short before a vowel or h, as in dēhiaco, dēinde, and coalesces with it in the poets; cf. dēhine, dēinceps; sometimes even contraction takes place, as in dēbeo, dego, from dēhabeo, de-ago.

II. Signif.: 1. down, away, off: deferro, deduco, defluo. 2. It denotes deficiency, or reverses the meaning of the root: minus, dis: decortico, deficio (un-make), dedamo, to acquire: decedet, it disgraces. 3. ceasing, preventing: dedoleo, degradinat. 4. away, out: delatator, declamo. 5. up, in pieces, etc.: desurgo, defraor (use up), delascro. 6. over, over-much, much: deauro, defleo, decanto, dealbo, delaboro, deamo. 7. De is often put between an adj. or pron. and its substantive: of this, the foregoing examples furnish instances. It is also frequently put after a simple relative.

dēa, ae (dat. and abl. plur. deabus in the combination dis deabusque, Cic.) f. [deus] a goddess: perque novem iura, numina nostra, deas, Ov.: venatrix, i. e. Diana, id.: silvarum, the same, id.: triplices, i. e. the Fates, id.

dis-, an inseparable particle, occurs before vowels only in dishlasco, and there it is unchanged; it is changed into di- before e and habeo: dirimo, diribeo; before consonants it sometimes remains unaltered, as before c, p, q, t, and before s with a foll. vowel; discedo, dispar, disquiro, dissto, discentio: sometimes assimilates its s to the foll. consonant, as before f: differo: and sometimes rejects the s and lengthens the vowel; diabolo, diduco, digero, diabor, dimoveo, dinumero, diripio, disclindo, divello. Before j it varies between the forms dis and di: dijicio, dijungo, dijugo, dijudico: In the MSS. both forms of the same word are not unfrequently found. ||. dis before verbs means asunder, in pieces, apart, in two: designating the separation of a whole into parts: e.g. diffindo, diffugio, dirumpo: sometimes it denotes the separation of what has been brought into temporary connection, e.g. digru- dior, discedo. As separation is opposed to connection, dis sometimes forms the opposites of words compounded with con: e.g. diffido, diffiteor; opp. to confido, confiteor. 2. Before adjectives dis denotes difference or negation: e.g. discord, dissonus, dissimilis, difficilis. [Dis is connected with the second numeral: cf. Sans. disis; Gr. dis; Lat. dis: the connection between two and division, severance, etc., is seen in Germ. zweiſchen.]

E, e, indecl. n. or (rubaud. litera) 3. Fig.: the fifth letter of the Latin alphabet, the second of the vowel series, representing both the e and the η of the Greeks. The short e is the least emphatic of the Latin vowels except i.

1. e is substituted for a: 1. In compounds of roots which contain a long by position: e.g.: scando, descendo. ||

sometimes, but rarely, takes the place of d: e.g.: grādor, progredior. In some cases double forms exist, the one with the substituted, the other with the original vowel: e.g.: from spargo, we have both conspargo, and conspargo. ||

2. In the reduplication of roots with d: e.g.: cādo, cē-cidi; tango (root tāg-) tē-tigi.

3. In the perfect of some verbs which have d in the imperfect: e.g.: facio, fēcī; facio, fēcī. This may perhaps have arisen from the contraction of reduplicated perfects, je-citī, fe-citī. ||

4. e is changed into i: 1. In a few compound verbs: e.g.: spēcio, conspicio; prēmo, imprimō; but generally e in root-verbs remains unchanged. ||

ex or ē (the latter form only before consonants, and even there far less frequently than ex). But certain expressions have the same form invariably, as ex parte, ex sententiâ, ex tempore; and on the other hand, e regione and e republica, used adverbially, prep. with adl. [The original form of this prep. was probably ec, which is found in many compounds, and is identical with the Gr. ἐκ, the form ex corresponding with Gr. ἐξ] out of, from (opp. to in).
A. Of space: in has lautumias ex oppidis deduci imperantur, Cic. 2. In a downward direction: from, down from, off: equestribus proeliis sæpe ex equis desiliunt, Caes. 3. In an upward direction: globum terræ eminentem e mari, Cic. 4. To denote the quarter (without motion): on, at: reliquis ex omnibus portibus colles oppidum cingebant, on all the other sides, Caes. II. Hence, with a subst. for an adv. denoting origin: from, of: ex Aethiopia est usque hæc, Ter. Freq. without a verb: Q. Junius ex Hispania quidam, Caes. III. To indicate the place where any thing is done, from, down from: Ariovistus ex equis ut colloquerentur postulavit, id. Hence the adverbial expressions, ex adverso, ex diverso, ex contrario, e regione, ex parte, etc. (v. adversus, etc.). Also, ex itinere, during or on a journey or march (but implying its interruption): Cic.: ex fuga, from or after the flight, Caes.

B. Of time: from and after a given point of time: from, since: bonus volo jam ex hoc die esse, from this day forward, Pl.: ex quo (ac tempore) obces Romæ fuit, Liv. 2. Immediately after, directly after, after: Cotta ex consulatu est productus in Galliam, Cic. So the phrase, aliquid ex alio, one thing after another: me quotidie aliud ex alio impedit, id. So, diem ex die expectabam, one day after another, from day to day, id. II. Less freq. in specifying a future date: from, after: hunc judicem ex Kal. Jan. non habemus, id.

C. Of other relations: I. With verbs which denote taking, receiving (both physically and mentally, as perceiving, learning, hoping, etc.): from, out of, of: solem e mundo tollere videntur, qui amicitiam e vita tollunt, id.: intellexi ex tuis litteris te ex Turanno audiase, id.: ex captivis comperit, Caes. II. With words denoting the whole from which something is taken. Esp. with numerals: out of, of: ex omnibus sæculis vix tria aut quatuor nominantur patria amicum, Cic.: ex dediticis Belgis complures, Caes.: ex tribus istis modis rerum publicarum velle scire quod optimum judices, Cic. 2. Sometimes for the genitive: has (turres) altitudo puppium ex barbaris navibus superabat, Caes. III. To denote the material of which anything is made: of: status ex ære facta, Cic.: monilia e gemmis, Suet. IV. To indicate the cause or origin: from, through, by, by reason of, on account of: quum esset ex ære alieno commota civitas, Cic.: in specu victoriæ adductus ex opportunitate loci, Sall.: ex Transalpinis gentibus triumphare, Cic. 2. Esp. to indicate that from which anything derives its name: from, after, on account of: cui postea Africano cognomen ex virtute fuit, Sall.

V. To indicate transition: from, out of: dil ex hominibus facti, Cic.: nihil est tam miserabile quam ex beato miser, id. VI. Ex (ē) re, ex usu, or ex injuria, etc. (any one's advantage or injury): aliquid facere bene et e re publica, for the good of the state, id.: eam rem non minus ex usu terræ Galliæ, quam populi Rom. accidisse, Caes.: ex nullius injuria, Liv. VII. To denote conformity: according to, after, in conformity with: ex litteris Caesaris supplicatio decreta est, Caes.: ex collegii sententia, Liv.: ex senatus consulto, Cic.: ex fodere, Liv. VIII. In adverbial expressions: e.g. ex æquo, ex commodo, ex diverso, ex facili, ex affluenti, ex contenti, ex confesso, ex improvviso, ex inopinato, e regione, etc.: v. these words. Ex placed after its noun: terris ex omnia surgunt, Lucr.

D. In composition ex is usually employed only before vowels and the consonants A, C, P, Q, S, T; before f, the prefix becomes ef; and before the other consonants the form e is used. A few exceptions to these rules are found: e.g. epoto and epotus as well as expotus; excedo as well as excedimus; the forms exfero, exfari, exfodio, are not uncommon in good MSS., and from them (not from exfero, etc.) the assimilated form proceeds. Moreover, in the compounds of roots beginning with s, the s is often elided: e.g. excidium for excidium (from excindere), and sometimes double forms of such compounds exist: e.g. exul, exul, etc.

2. Signification: a. Primarily, and most freq. out of, forth: exeo; and in an upward direction, emineo. Hence also, fig. to imply change, the result being indicated by the root, e.g. effeminare, to change a man's disposition into that of a woman: in other cases ex is privative and equivalent to the English without, or the suffix less: e.g. effrenare, elinguis. b. termination, conclusion: e.g. elugeo; so in the neuter verbs which in composition (esp. after the Aug. per.) become active: e.g. egredior, excedo. Sometimes ex is equivalent to utterly, entirely: e.g. evincere; and hence it comes to have an intensive force equivalent to the superlative suffix: e.g. edurus.

ex-āsperō, avi, atum, v. v. a. to exasperate, provoke, make angry, to afflict: Liv.

exactio, ōnis, f. [exigō] a driving out, expelling: regum, Cic. II. a demanding, exacting. Esp. a calling in, collecting of debts: Liv. Hence 2. a tax, tribute: acerbissima exactio capillum atque ostorium, poll and hearth tax, Cic.

F.

F, the sixth letter of the Latin alphabet, occupies the same place as the digamma or vau in the Greek alphabet, to which it corresponds in form. F is one of the few aspirated letters in the Latin alphabet, and belongs to the class of labials: hence it corresponds most nearly to the Greek Φ: this is seen from a comparison of such words as fero, fuga, with the Greek φέρω, φύγω. Subsequently, however, the complex symbol φ was introduced into Latin, and then it became the exclusive representative of the Greek φ, until, in the last period of the language, f again frequently took the place of φ, and finally, in Italian, entirely supplanted it.

1. With H, the h in Latin corresponding to f in the Sabine dialect: e. g. sedus, haedus; faesena, harena (arena); fordeum, hordeum; vefo, velo etc. 2. With X in Greek: e. g. freum, χαλκός; fel, χαλκή; funis, σ-χοινός.

3. With Θ in Greek: e. g. fera, θύρ; ferreo, θέρει, θέρω, θέρω, etc. 4. With B: e. g. af for ab; siflare for sibilare; rufus, ruber; fremo, βρέω; fascino, βασκαίνω. Also with B in the Teutonic languages: e. g. Lat. frater, ferre, frango; Eng. brother, bear, break.

5. In the composition of roots beginning with f the final consonants of the prefixes are assimilated to it: e. g. offero, affero, differo, effero, for ob-fero, ad-fero, dis-fero, ex-fero, etc. || Changes of F in the Romance languages.

1. Into A (cf. II. 1.). This occurs chiefly in Spanish, in which it is very common: e. g. Lat. ferrum, filius; Span. hierro, hijo; Lat. fabulari, facere; Span. hablar (Fr. habler), hacer. 2. Into B: e. g. Lat. flocus, il. biaccolo; Lat. forfic, it. forbice.

G.

G, g, indecl. n. or (litera subaud.) f. G, I This letter represents the sound of the medial guttural, but was not originally included in the Latin alphabet, its place being supplied by C, which, as stated under that letter, had in early times the sound of the Greek γ (for examples vide C.). The pronunciation of G having subsequently undergone a change, a new symbol, slightly differing from it, was introduced about the beginning of the second Punic war.

II. As an initial, g, in pure Latin words, enters into consonantal combination with l and r only; hence in roots which originally began with gn, the g was rejected in the classical period; e. g. gnascor, gnatus, gnomen, became nascor, natus, nomen; but in the compounds the g reappears, e. g.: cognatus, cognomen. III. Interchanges of G with other letters. As a guttural, g is most closely connected with the other gutturals, c, k, q, j, and h. 1. For the interchanges of c and g, vide C. 2. With s, g combines to form z: e. g. the stem reg- has x. s. rez; so grey-grez, etc. Similarly in the perfect tenses of verbs, tego, texi; rego, rexi. But sometimes the g is elided: e. g. mulgeo, mulsi. IV. Changes of G in the Romance languages. 1. Into j: e. g. Lat. galbinus; Fr. jaune; Port. and Sp. jalde. 2. Into v: e. g. Lat. gyrare; Fr. river. 3. Into y or i: e. g. Lat. reg-; Sp. rey; Fr. roi. 4. GM into m or mm: e. g. Lat. augumentare; It. aumentare. 5. G followed by D, into I, n, or d, or omitted: e. g. Lat. smaragdus, amygdala, Magdalenā; It.

emeraldus, mandola, Maddalena; Fr. émeraude, amande, Madeline. 6. Omission of G: (1) between two vowels: e. g. Lat. regalis, legalis; It. reale, reale; Lat. ligare, Augustus; Fr. lier, août. (2) At the end of words: e. g. Lat. reg- (rez); It. re. V. As an abbreviation G denotes Galliarum, Gallica, gemina, Germania, etc.: and sometimes Gaius (instead of the usual C).
